resources cover all the others, theories, approaches, and contemporary issues in counseling. The four volumes of this Encyclopedia are finely designed so they can program. They are thought of as moving through an advanced topic to an introductory one, they might discuss the development of a particular area before 2005, or they might present the original volume but would provide a primary emphasis on the treatment of excessive stress and that would employ an integrative phenomenological model to facilitate clinical practice. Other topics include the importance of the work of the American Psychological Association (APA) and the American Counseling Association (ACA) in the context of counseling psychology. These volumes provide a comprehensive overview of the theories, models, techniques, and challenges involved in professional counseling. With approximately 600 entries, this definitive treatment of counseling psychology is an indispensable resource for the range of practitioners and scientists interested in human-behavior relationships. Particular emphasis is provided for trainees in neuropsychology and neuropsychologists. However, the easy to use format, tables, appendices, and glossary makes it an easily accessible and comprehensive guide for professionals in the field of counseling psychology.

This book describes the use of therapeutic art, music, and dance interventions against a background of mentalization, thus forging a link between arts therapies and mentalization-based treatment. This book has its roots in the theory of Mentalization Based Treatment by Antony Bateman and Peter Fonagy, and combines the broad experience of many art therapists with art, music and dance/movement therapy in psychiatric settings in the treatment of adults and adolescents both individually and in groups, as well as children with disorganised attachment. As a treatment concept, mentalization is quite straightforward because mentalizing is a typically human ability. As Bateman and Fonagy (2012) say: “Without mentalizing there can be no robust sense of self, no constructive social interaction, no mutuality in relationships, and no sense of personal security”. On the other hand, it is not so simple to fully grasp the significance of mentalization. Mentalization-based therapy is a specific type of psychotherapy designed to help people reflect on their own thoughts and feelings and differentiate them from the perspectives of others.
