Rebirth in Buddhism refers to the teaching that the actions of a person lead to a new existence after death, in an endless cycle called saṃsāra. This cycle is considered the "natural process of death and rebirth". The cycle stops only if rebirth (samsaric) is understood by insight and followed by a pure. Enlightenment is one of the four noble truths of Buddhism, along with the four noble truths of suffering, the four noble truths of the way to which cessation can be attained, and the four noble truths of morality. The cycle is seen as the endless cycle of birth and death, and the process of achieving liberation from this cycle is called "Nirvana".
